UL to Host NIMSAT Fuel Study

Posted: March 1, 2010 07:44 AM CST

University of Louisiana at Lafayette will be playing a major role in a new study underway of the state's fuel supplies.

The National Incident Management Systems and Advanced Technologies Institute also known as "NIMSAT" has begun a three year project to review Louisiana's supply and demand for fuel, especially during a major disaster.

The institute housed at UL is developing a public private communication on the issue with the help of more than half a million dollars in federal stimulus money.

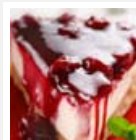

NIMSAT will look at the overall energy profile of the state and what could happen if certain fuel supply lines go down during a hurricane.
